Their exact numbers are unknown but are thought to be in the 2,000-5,000 range, after suffering tremendous declines during the 20-year civil war in eastern Congo. They are the only great ape listed on the 25 most-endangered primates list by the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and their status was just elevated to "critical."

Open to Public Inspection

Name of the organization: Dian Fossey Gorilla Fund International, Inc.

Employer identification number: 52-1118866

Form 990, Part I, Line 1, Description of Organization Mission:

The Dian Fossey Gorilla Fund International, Inc., is dedicated to the conservation of gorillas and their habitats in Africa. We are committed to promoting continued research on their threatened ecosystems and education about their relevance to the world in which we live.

In collaboration with government agencies and other international partners, we also provide assistance to local communities through education, health, training and economic development initiatives.

Form 990, Part III, Line 1, Description of Organization Mission:

The Dian Fossey Gorilla Fund International, Inc., is dedicated to the conservation of gorillas and their habitats in Africa. We are committed to promoting continued research on their threatened ecosystems and education about their relevance to the world in which we live.

In collaboration with government agencies and other international partners, we also provide assistance to local communities through education, health, training and economic development initiatives.

Form 990, Part III, Line 4a, Program Service Accomplishments:

this area has almost doubled, from a low of 240 in the 1980s to a current population of 480. It is the only great ape whose numbers are increasing.

However, this success also presents new challenges. We now monitor triple the number of groups that we did just seven years ago, and these groups are ranging over a significantly larger area as they try to avoid each other and the potentially lethal fights that can occur when groups interact. Other dangers to their survival remain, as well. We know that without our continued intensive protection and monitoring-we provided more than 100,000 person-hours of direct protection in 2016-our successes over the last few decades will be threatened.

From our base at Karisoke, we also impact the lives of hundreds of family members of our Rwandan staff and communities near the park, by employing more than 120 local people as trackers, patrol members, scientists and educators, and by providing support for local health initiatives and schools.

By supporting local health clinics, providing access to clean water and nutrition programs, and delivering hygiene education, the Fossey Fund helps reduce disease transmission from humans to gorillas and enhances the quality of life in communities near gorilla habitat. The Fossey Fund has also played a significant role in developing and improving the physical infrastructures at the nearby Bisate Clinic, which serves some 20,000 local people. Recently we helped build a maternity ward at the clinic, which now serves some 50 women per month and for the first time allows them to give birth in an area that is separate from sick patients.

Form 990, Part III, Line 4b, Program Service Accomplishments:

the University of Rwanda (UR), to bring hundreds of students to Karisoke for field courses, research projects and completion of their undergraduate senior research projects in biology. In 2016, we hosted more than 400 students in primatology and conservation biology field courses, the largest group since this program started in 2004. We also provided financial and supervisory support for UR students to conduct their senior thesis research on site at Karisoke, a program that has been ongoing since 2003, and now we also offer post-graduate internship opportunities for local students to get further training. These students are literally the next generation of conservationists in Rwanda-more than 90% go on to careers in conservation and science within Rwanda.

We also support the capacity of our staff through education opportunities. In 2016, we assisted several of our Rwandan research staff to pursue advanced degrees in science and now also provide support to all field staff who wish to pursue college degrees as they continue their work with us.

With respect to conservation education, the Fossey Fund's programs help primary and secondary school children learn about the richness of their natural heritage and the unique species that share their ecosystem. This program served more than 2,000 primary school children in 2016. It includes training for science teachers, working with environmental clubs we established at local schools, field visits for school children, and general support for the local Bisate School, including more than 15,000 notebooks, 10,000 pens, and 700 math equipment kits.

Our education programs also target adults. In 2016, we showed conservation movies to more than 4,000 community members and took nearly 50 community leaders to see gorillas in the forest, and attend workshops on gorilla conservation. In one of our most successful efforts, we financially supported the Rwandan government's efforts to educate and engage suspected poachers. As a result of this effort, we saw a 75% decline in the number of snares and are now working with local authorities to continue this effort. In 2016, we had no gorillas caught in snares.

We continued to work with the Bisate Learning Center, which we built in collaboration with Partners in Conservation in 2015, providing a community of more than 20,000 individuals with their first access to computers and a library. This facility is the first of its kind in the area and has greatly increased the ability of the community to learn basic computer skills as well as access resources, news and information.

We are also committed to capacity building in our newer programs, located in Congo. We arrange staff exchanges between Rwanda and Congo, both for training and to engage in "scientific diplomacy," which helps build relationships within this region that has seen war and conflict for decades. We also organize meetings and workshops with local communities in our study areas, to discuss current gorilla conservation issues and to identify actions ensuring the sustainability of wildlife populations.

Globally, the Fossey Fund website at gorillafund.org, our news-blog, and our social media sites are a main outreach tool to inform and engage the public by describing our work, providing basic information about gorillas and their conservation, reporting on important findings and research, and suggesting ways to help. We created a new, mobile-friendly website this year, with enhanced educational and interactive learning activities. There are more than 500,000 page views on our website each year and we have more than 200,000 followers on Facebook, Twitter and other social media channels.

The Fossey Fund's regional center in Musanze, Rwanda, from which Karisoke operates, is an international resource for conservation, science and education, offering labs, a GIS center, a library, conference facility, and a developing environmental education center

The Fossey Fund's support for research is vital to providing a scientific basis for conservation planning to protect gorillas and their environments. Much of what the scientific community knows about gorillas has originated from the Karisoke Research Center, which has been involved in more than 250 publications on gorillas and the surrounding biodiversity. In the past year, Fossey Fund scientists produced 26 studies for publication in scientific journals, with more underway. Our scientists have been published in a wide variety of major journals, including Science, Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, Behaviour, Animal Behaviour, and The American Naturalist

The Fossey Fund's science program initiates and coordinates scientific partnerships, writes grants to support scientific and conservation activities, conducts research, produces publications and manages the Karisoke Research Center's nearly 50 years of data on gorilla behavior and ecology. Currently, the Fossey Fund is digitizing and upgrading all of its records to develop a web-based, searchable database. In addition, our scientists just developed the first major i-Pad app designed specifically for collecting behavioral and health data on wild animals, called "Animal Observer." It is available for free to all scientists, educators and any others interested in learning about data collection.

Form 990, Part III, Line 4c, Program Service Accomplishments:
After 11 years of field work to help create a corridor of community-managed nature reserves in Congo, the Fossey Fund established a permanent research and conservation field station in the village of Nkuba, at the edge of a pristine forest that is home to Grauer's gorillas and other highly endangered wildlife. We surveyed an adjacent 700-square-kilometer area (which is more than four times the size of the available gorilla habitat in all of Rwanda), and identified a population of some 140 Grauer's gorillas living in multiple groups. In 2016, we had staff in the forest providing protection 365 days per year, as we do at Karisoke. We also were able to gain very valuable data on the behavior of Grauer's gorillas, which will be essential for developing effective conservation strategies. Our work to protect gorillas also helps many other species of wildlife living in this area, including eastern chimpanzee, bongo and leopard. We now have three teams in the forest in Congo, with a fourth team in development, and are working to locate additional areas where these gorillas may still be found and require protection.

We are also collaborating with the Congolese wildlife authorities (ICCN) to observe the only habituated group of Grauer's gorillas, located in Kahuzi-Biega National Park. This group had originally been habituated for tourism and is monitored and protected by ICCN staff. We are working with them to collect data using the same protocols as we do at the Karisoke Research Center. This will enable direct comparisons between the two populations. Since Grauer's gorillas are the most understudied of the four gorilla subspecies, this work is critical to building the information we need to successfully conserve them.

The Fossey Fund also continued to support the Gorilla Rehabilitation and Conservation Education (GRACE) center, an institution we initiated in 2008. GRACE is now operated by a consortium that includes the Fossey Fund and has recently received its own nonprofit status here in the U.S. GRACE provides a place for local officials to bring Grauer's gorillas rescued from poachers, which increases the likelihood that laws against gorilla trafficking will be enforced. Scientists and field staff at GRACE then care for and monitor these young gorillas as they recover and learn wild survival skills, with the goal of eventual release back to the wild.
